Annexation decision delayed despite protests

By DINAH ROSE Staff Writer

Despite vehement protests from residents, the Upland City Council last week decided to postpone until August a decision on a proposed annexation to the city

In what some disgruntled residents opposed to annexation termed "putting off the inevitable," the council instructed city staff to study possible zone changes that might make the annexation more palatable to those who live in the area

The proposed annexation involves a 40-acre "island" of unincorporated land, nestled between Upland on the north and east and Montclair to the south and west.

The area is roughly bordered by Benson and Central avenues on the west and east, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad tracks to the south, and the Upland city limits, slightly north of Ninth Street. We people in the county area are not going to respond to a proposal of a different color," said Robert Kleinow of 1934 W. Ninth St., in reference to the proposed zone 'The fact of the matter is, we want to be able to park our cars in the front yard, to wash our cars in the front yard, and to fix them there if we want to. We want to be able to have businesses in our back yards.

'We don't want your inch-thick rule book.

Kleinow also presented the council with a petition opposing the annexation, reportedly signed by 84 percent of the previously registered voters in the area, and by another 20 newly registered residents.

We have 107 percent of the existing registered voters opposing this move," Kleinow told the council. "Please remember this when the city should covet our area

City Clerk Dee Carpenter has 30 days to verify the names on the petition following the close of the public hearing, now extended to Aug. 3.

If 50 percent or more of the registered residents of the area protest annexation, the proceedings must summarily be dropped, according to City Attorney Donald Proceedings leading to the annexation move by the city were initiated on the recommendation of the Local Agency Formation Commission. According to City Manager Lee Travers, steps are being made to incorporate such islands of county land into nearby cities in an effort to save costs for services, such as police and fire protection and water and sewer service.

The county is currently responsible for services in the "Many people aren't even aware that this sector is not part of the city," said Travers.

Residents of the county land lined up essentially to tell the city to "back off.

"I can see what the city has and hasn't done for city residents," said Lester Harris of 1823 W. Ninth St. "Look at the area just north of us on Huntington Drive. It's in deplorable condition.

If the city has done nothing for the people there, why should we expect them (the city) to do anything for us?' Robert Olson, of of 1751 W. Ninth St., called Huntington Drive "not much more than a cow trail" during winter

"I'm afraid, too, the city will want to put in curbs, lights, sidewalks — I like the trees the way they are," he

The area is now a mixture of homes and small businesses in an industrial setting. The zoning called for in the city's general plan changes the area north of Ninth Street to residential. Many of the people at Monday's meeting said they wouldn't be as opposed to the move if they would be allowed to continue their businesses.

William White of 1801 W. Ninth St. said the change to residential would threaten his bee-keeping business of 10

'We all want to be able to continue our small businesses there," he said.

Councilman Frank Carpenter pointed out that existing businesses would be allowed to continue as a nonconforming use, for at least 40 years. But Council member Ina Petokas agreed that to change the entire area's zoning to light industrial might make more sense. and suggested perhaps the city land north to the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks might also be zoned in a similar Maroney said if the changes in zoning satisfied some of the residents, they could remove their names from the petition, making annexation still a possibility.

The city staff was instructed to study making the proposed changes and present the findings to the council at the August meeting.

Kleinow said the move would make no difference. He indicated that the county residents were considering taking steps to de-annex the portion of Upland extending north to the railroad tracks

"I just wanted you to be forwarned," he said. Council members expressed frustration at the stubborn resistance.

'I don't understand how they can come up with 107 percent of the registered voters," muttered one. 'The city hasn't been 'out for blood' the way these people would intimate," said Travers. "Up until December, we had a two-year period where we could annex the land

Upland budget ready for vote

The Upland City Council hashed out final details for a $19.7 million budget Monday at the last in a series of special hearings.

The final vote of approval, however, cannot be cast until the July 6 meeting, because of an oversight in advertising for the general revenue sharing portion of the budget.

The budget, up only 5 percent from last year's figure of $18.7 million, represents some corner-cutting and a few additions to city operations. Finance Director Tim Brown told the council that according to his most recent projections of what the city can expect in terms of state revenue, an additional $181,593 will be received over the figures estimated for the projected budget. He said the city would probably receive about $2.6 million in property taxes, up almost $700,000 from his original estimate. That amount is tempered by the loss of nearly $500,000 in anticipated state-shared revenues such as motor vehicle tax, cigarette tax and the alcohol beverage license fee.

The department that seems to benefit most directly from the good news may be general services, which was facing a dramatic cutback in man-

General Services Director Ken Hoover told the council it would be possible to leave part of the city's tree-trimming crew, originally scheduled to be cut by the austere proposed budget.

For an additional $145.511, he said the city could reinstate the foreman and five maintenance workers scheduled to be cut from the 1981-82 budget. In addition. Hoover said a schedule could be worked out so the employees could spend part of the season working on city parks as well.

The police department received budgeting for what amounts to another 2.5 officers, bringing the city's total of police officers at full force to 39.5. Police Chief Coy Estes modified his original request, which called for the addition of 4.5 officers. Instead, the department will receive funds for six part-time cadets, to handle routine office work and report-taking at police headquarters, freeing officers for other tasks.

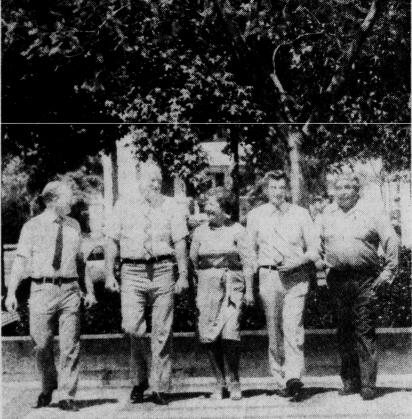

Representatives from the city's fire department asked council members to allocate a figure not to exceed $4,000 to help outfit a training program that utilizes television monitors.

Fire Chief Don Justis told the council that the current procedure of holding all training sessions at one site left the city vulnerable at the other two stations during training periods.

He said a study by Division Chief Don Johnson showed the change would save the city $2,200 in gas costs alone, for transporting the fire fighters and their vehicles to the training site. In addition, the proposed system will be compatible with others produced by the county, and interdepartmental swaps" of raining films will be possible The council agreed to have the public hearing on General Revenue Sharing at the July 6 session. In addition, it decided to postpone discussion on community requests for funds until September when the vacation season is over and a more precise picture of the budget situation will be available.

Upland Public Library buys books on demand

The Upland Public Library spent $60,000 on books between July 1980 and April 1981, and this money purchased 4,000 new volumes at an average cost of $15 per volume, according to Pat Castaneda, principal librarian.

The books were selected in four main areas - adult fiction and nonfiction and children's fiction and nonfiction. The professional staff, Cheryl Davenport, children's librarian; Maureen Bartolotta. reference librarian; Castaneda and Linda Yao, library director, have primary responsibility for choosing the books.

"We have a book selection policy which provides us with general guidelines. It includes important principles such as the right of the public to access to books on all subjects, and the basic goal of the library to serve all members of the community," Castaneda said. Beyond that our primary guide for making selections is public

Each librarian is required to read a number of professional journals which contain book reviews. As she reads each review the librarian will consider whether the reviewer liked the book, if there is an immediate demand for the book, will there be a long term use of the title and is the book appropriate to the collection.

It is necessary for the librarian to draw upon her knowledge of authors and titles, of the book collection, and of the public she serves. The library's book selectors are in a particularly good position to make these decisions since they work with the public and the collection on a daily basis, according to Castaneda.

The library spent $6,000 last year filling patron requests for books. Library policy has been to buy books patrons request when they are available, and to get out - of - print titles via inter - library loan. The general financial outlook for local government makes it doubtful whether the library can continue this policy, Castaneda said. It is important for interested individuals to have direct input into the building of the collection, however.

College groups strongly backed 2 recall winners

By STEVE STANDERFER Staff Writer

Three candidates who challenged the three trustees involved in Chaffey College's recall election April 14, received strong financial support in their campaigns from college employee organizations. In final candidates statements filed with the county Registrar of Voters office, successful challengers Robert Edmonson and Isabel Scully received their entire financial support from the California School Employees Organization (CSEA) and California Teachers Association (CTA), affiliated with the Chaffey College Teachers Association. The two each received $200 from CSEA and $1,000 from the CTA's

Association for Better Citizenship. Stephen Whaley, who unsuccessfully challenged Dr. Ron Davis for the seat of Jimmy Gutierrez, also received identical contributions from the two organizations in addition to $100 from Louise Strona of Upland.

Throughout the campaign, opponents of the recall claimed the three were being backed as college faculty loyalists.

However, despite the three receiving the endorsements of the two employee groups, all said they would not be influenced by such support if elected.

The deadline for filing the final statements was 5 p.m. Thursday, the same day a reception was held for the board by the CSEA chapter, CCTA and other college organizations. Three candidates failed to meet the deadline. Bobby Little, Davis and Gutierrez will be faced with a $10 fine for each day they are late, according to Dorothy Parrish, a deputy with the voters office.

Davis and Gutierrez had the two biggest war chests in the campaign. according to their last statements filed before the election.

As of March 28, Davis listed a total of $4.708 in contributions, including $3,503 in loans to himself. Gutierrez listed total contributions of $4,770, including $3,200 in loans to himself.

Other final candidates campaign statements show that no more than $500 was spent by any of the others. Herschel Glenn and Curtiss Bonneville Sr., who were both recalled, filed short forms, meaning they didn't spend more than $500. Challengers Marvin Weetman, Bobby Little, Lester Dinerstein, Orland DeCiccio, Steve Bryant and Emery Brewer also filed the short Quietly and without fanfare, a service to the local educational field is daily providing the best in education for the handicapped.

The West End Special Education Service Region covers a consortium of 10 West End school districts ... Chaffey, Upland, Ontario-Montclair. Chino, Mt. Baldy, Cucamonga, Etiwanda, Alta Loma, Central-Cucamonga and Mountain View.

Carolyn Tarris, educational assessment service program manager, said those working within the WESESR provide services for students, 3 to 21 years, with exceptional needs. In addition, there also are programs provided to handicapped children from birth to 3 years of age

"Our goal is to provide appropriate educational assistance for all handicapped students at no additional cost to the parents," Tarris

Since the Public Law 94-142 passed, parents/guardians have rights which are protected by federal law. The Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975 has one broad purpose ... all handicapped children have available to them a free appropriate public education which emphasizes special education and related services designed to meet their unique needs.

The handicapped child has been designated as being deaf, deaf/blind, hard of hearing, mentally retarded, multihandicapped.

Installation dinner

orthopedically impaired, other health impaired, seriously emotionally disturbed, specific learning disabled, speech impaired or visually handicapped.

Within the WESESR is the Educational Assessment Service Team, Tarris said. "The team is composed of qualified special education personnel who meet with the parents of a student who has been evaluated by the local school but whose educational needs could not be met at that school site."

One thing the team does is to make sure the parents/ guardians know what their rights are concerning the education of their handicapped student, Tarris said.

This is one of three areas in which decisions are made for the individual student. The first is the staff development when discussion of the individual student's needs are reviewed by the teachers, administrators, special education staff and any specialists (psychologists, etc.) within the district.

The third area as explained by Tarris is for parents. This involves a parent-training series on how to handle their handicapped youngsters at home and how to help "Often we bring in outside specialists in certain cases," Tarris said. "such as for autism, we consult Dr. Laura Schreibman of Claremont Men's College who is knowledgeable in that field."

Since last September, Tarris said there have been over 190 meetings with parents and the team members of the Educational Assessment Ser-

Within the meetings, the child's needs are discussed and an Independent Educational Plan is explained to the parents. "The parents are an active part of the meeting," Tarris

"We strive to make the parents feel secure and as comfortable as possible in the meetings," she continued. "We like to keep it from becoming heavy ... it's a strain to have a group make decisions about your child.

Tarris said the group is well aware of this strain and she has the parents sit near her and Ken Thomas, psychologist with the Education Assessment Service. "We encourage them to ask questions," she said. "Right now, we have 5,000 (students) getting excellent programs," Tarris said.

Out of the 190-plus meetings held with parents since September. Tarris said only four or five times have advocates come into a meeting. Advocates are individuals. generally other parents of handicapped children in the education program, who are there to "back up" the parents whose child is being discussed.

This happens, Tarris explained. when the parents are dissatisfied and are not happy with the service offered the student

At times, the demands of the parents are beyond what the district can do, she said. She cited an example of a parent who insisted his 17year old son be sent to one of the most expensive private facilities in California. "If we thought this was necessary, we would do it, but we are dealing with taxpayers money. We feel the program the boy is getting is perfectly adequate," she

'We cannot pay for private schooling if we have the program in our system," she said. Tarris explained the 24-hour residential school placement is about $1,500 a month. A particular school in Santa Barbara for the retarded and emotionally disturbed child is $2,000 a month

Another request considered "strange" was the parent who wanted a "particular bus and a particular driver" because her son would only ride with that "particular" combination. "No," was the answer to the request. "It was not justified. It was unreasonable.'

Basically, there are only a few unhappy parents out of the many who are pleased with what is offered their children. "We can offer most any service for any child." Tarris said. "We try to keep them as close to home as possible, and we are certain the makeup of the class is compatible as well as matching the teacher with the child.

Spelled out in a new brochure, the masterplan is: (1) ensure each exceptional child a review of his/her individual needs; (2) Ensure that the educational services will be tailored to meet those defined needs and the "least restrictive program" will be found for each individual; (3) Ensures that the services are periodically reviewed to determine the appropriateness for each child: and (4) Guarantees that parents/guardians be involved with the professionals in the entire process.

Case will test state's 'reckless fire' law

Staff Writer Every year there is a handful of residents who flaunt the law and set off illegal fireworks during the Fourth of July holiday season.

This year those individuals risk being convicted of a felony if their play even accidentally sets a home or other property on fire.

The city of Upland has filed a complaint with the District Atrelatively new legislation in connection with a roof fire set June 11. A 20-year-old Upland man has been charged with firing a bottle rocket that may have started the blaze and caused about $4,500 worth of Section 452 of the California Penal Code actually became effective in January 1980. But it has not been tested yet in San Bernardino County, according to Capt. Pete Bryan, a deputy fire marshal with the Upland Fire Department.

The new section states that an individual is guilty of unlawfully causing a fire when he recklessly causes any structure or other property to be burned. "Recklessly" is defined as consciously disregarding a "substantial and unjustifiable risk" that the actions taken will start a

Accidentally setting fire to property other than a structure or forest land may be treated as a misdemeanor rather than a felony

Bryan said that although the penalty may be stiff, firefighters are enthusiastic about the law.

"It's been a problem for a long time in a variety of areas," he said. Roofing companies, for instance. have a tendency not to follow proper precautions with their tar pots, and many fires have resulted.

'We don't intend to carry this to the extreme, but it should be a great help in making people a little more careful.

There have already been several structure fires in the West End this month that firefighters attribute to or suspect were started by illegal fireworks.

The use of any fireworks at all is not permitted in Upland, Ontario. Montclair or unincorporated areas. Chino and Rancho Cucamonga permit the use of "safe and sane" fireworks - but anything that explodes or is shot into the air is completely banned in all areas. Bryan said even the "safe and sane" fireworks may cause injuries and start fires if used incorrectly. However, when properly supervised, he said they can be a relative-

Early summer sparks fireworks warnings

Annual warnings from local fire departments regarding the use of Fourth of July fireworks carry a particularly urgent note this year with the early coming of the fire

Representatives from West End fire departments gathered Wednesday to stress the importance of caution in using the "safe and sane" fireworks in designated areas — and the illegality of all other forms of fireworks.

Only two cities in the West End. Chino and Rancho Cucamonga, permit the purchase and use of "safe and sane" products. These are defined as stationary fireworks, such as sparklers, snakes and Anything that leaves the ground or explodes is illegal," said Fire Inspector Earl Thompson of the Chino Fire Department. "That's illegal, everywhere.

Other areas, including Upland. Ontario, Montclair and the unincorporated county lands, do not permit the use of any fireworks at all. Residents of these cities who would like to purchase "safe and sane" fireworks should be careful to also discharge them in a city where their Illegal fireworks will be confiscated, and their owners prosecuted. prosecuted. prosecuted. prosecuted.

Ontario Division Chief Joe Piscioneri said the high winds and blistering temperatures have increased the usual hazards present at this time of year.

Singing a song of praise helps one through the difficult times

By REV. JOSEPH GUTHRIE Montclair Ministerial Association

The Bible abounds in references to singing. Some songs come from joyous experiences of deliverance. Others come from scenes of pain and gloom. Paul and Silas, for preaching the Gospel in Philippi, were savagely beaten and cast into a foul and filthy prison. But they had no time for weeping and wailing. We read that, "at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises to God." (Acts 16:25)

From the many illustrations and instructions about singing it would seem that all people are to be members of God's choir. You say you can't sing? Then the Psalmist says, "Make a joyful noise to the Rock of our salvation." (95:1) Paul's word to the Ephesians was, "making melody in your heart" (6:10). Most of us who don't sing, don't try. We might be surprised how much singing can add to our lives.

David, the sweet singer of Israel, said, "He hath put a new song in my mouth." (Psalm 40:3) But the song came as the result of a process. David had been in a pit. Not an ordinary pit, but "an horrible pit." This is a picture of our position as sinners. The more we struggle the deeper we sink; we just can't escape by ourselves. He came from heaven to a sinful world and so we sing, "from sinking sand, He lifted me." Now we are eligible to sing in God's choir.

Also, with the Psalmist, we can say he has "set my feet upon a rock." What a contrast to the oozing mud in

Illness, health depend on state of mind

Copley News Service A fact of life is that our emotional state of mind has a major effect upon the functioning of our body, and does so more than any other single factor.

This is not an irresponsible statement, but a now proven medical fact. Interestingly enough it can be traced all the way back to the observations of the ancient Hebrew when he pronounced that we mortals are a total

In the counselor's office this is often seen in the mentally disturbed. Persons are not just sick in their thinking, they most often exhibit physical symptoms Great numbers of ordinary persons hurt from illnesses which seem to be chronic, but they can be traced directly to emotional pressure which they endure in their life and Considering the walking miracles each of our bodies are, it is surprising that we are not faced with more illnesses than we are. The average person is not even aware of the miracles that take place in his own body. Few of us know how to manufacture thyroxine, and yet the cells of my body know. We mortals have not yet found a way to conquer the common cold, but the body seems to know how to handle it in about seven days. I have always wondered about the cells in the ear which knows how to take out of the blood stream what is needed in order to make wax. Yet out of that same blood stream glands in the digestive system will take what is necessary to make hydrochloric acid, and in the right amounts, to help digest food, but not enough to destroy the intestine itself.

With all of this going on, when we suffer sharp emotional tension, our bodies reflect the pressure. When mental tension and pressure reach the level of severity, the body cannot possibly maintain normalcy and soon

A man came to me very much upset, with a great number of physical symptioms, such as swelling of the feet, indigestion, throbbing headache, and at times blurred vision. He was working for his father-in-law and perfection was the only standard. He had been examined by two phy sicians and they could find nothing by tests which was wrong, and the doctor suggested he seek someone for psychotherapy.

The only thing which I did for six weeks was to listen. and after the fourth week his physical symptoms began to disappear almost as if a miracle had taken place. His problem began with a conflict his father, and became acute when he was caught in a situation where he had to work with his very demanding father-in-law.

At the end of six weeks he was able to make a hard decision about seeking employment elsewhere, and he has had no recurrence of his symptoms since. His mental attitude was what was causing the great number of symptoms, which made him look, act, and think like a very sick man.

Teen-age girls fed diet of sex myths, dogma

By PATRICIA DIBSIE Copley News Service

Too many teen-age girls are fed a diet of myth and dogma whenever the topic of sex comes between mother and daughter, according to psychologist Dr. Irene Kassorla.

And research shows that mothers and fathers who do the most protecting often inflict the worst damage," she adds.

'Their teen-age daughters are the ones who rebel and end up more promiscuous than those teens who are given responsibility for politicing their own sexual behavior.

'The '80s will be a decade for evern more sexual freedom, but I see a need for people to learn about relationships, too. This is especially important in the adolescent years, where the parents are the role models.

Kassorla, a sex therapist in private practice in Los Angeles, also counsels mothers and daughters in methods of solving communications problems.

Her credentials list her as a University of California at Los Angeles graduate with a doctorate from the University of London's Institute of Psychiatry. She recently was named one of the 10 most influential women of the 1980s by the University of Southern California Panhellenic Council.

The psychologist, now promoting her new book, "Nice Girls Do" (Stratford Press, $9.95), insisted the negative comments parents make to one another and to their children affect the children's ability to establish happy relationships later on in life.

Kassorla, 49, is the mother of two daughters, ages 23 and 32. As a mother, she said she took her own advice. She gave her children the responsibility of making their own decisions and says she has never been disappointed in their choices.

'I told them from a very young age that whenever they felt ready to become sexually active to come to me and I would help them get on the pill," she said. "I was open about sex, but more important, we talked about the meaning of committing themselves to love and to a relationship with another person. Neither started having relationships until later on.

In her role as author, her candid statements about sexuality are likely to be viewed controversially by some readers. As a family therapist, Kassorla bluntly advocates frank talk between parents and teen-agers about sex.

More conservatively, she speaks out on behalf of the need for healthier family relationships in modern society. She said that today's teen-agers will have difficult relationships with the opposite sex in the future if they do not see relationships built on loving commitments among family members now.

'We are so conditioned by what we learn as children that most people have a great difficulty getting close to others," she said.

When it comes to sexual freedom, the psychologist cautions parents not to behave like wardens. Too many parents, she said, alarmed by today's promiscuity, impose enlightenment which children often carry into their adult lives.

'My premise is simply that mothers who will not talk about sex with their children, and who settle for teaching their daughters that nice girls don't fool around or 'lose control,' hinder the child's sexual development and may provide a start for mental and sexual problems later on," she said. In her book, Kassorla offers many suggestions for parents in the field of sex education. One is to start answering children's questions about sex as early as age 3.

'We need to take away the 'forbidden fruit' reputation sex has gained and examine sex for what sex really is," she said. "We need to teach our children the beauty of a physical relationship with a member of the opposite sex and teach them how to get the most out of the experience.

Although she is divorced (she was married at 16 - too young, she says), Kassorla advocates marriage. 'Marriage is the ideal human state. Divorce is a waste of time." She advocates teaching children about commitment as the alternative to teaching them that "There are an estimated 12 million teens out there who are sexually active (few have their parents' blessing or knowledge) and most of them have learned all that they know about sex from their peers. More misinformation gets passed around this way, and some of it is responsible for the increase in teen-age pregnancy.

Some parents actually believe that if they don't bring up the subject of sex in the home, then their children won't think about it

Counseling helps solve Chino juvenile problems

By BOB NAGEY Staff Writer

A "soft approach" in juvenile diversion apparently has begun to pay high dividends in the Chino Valley.

Figures released for the past year by Chino Youth Services shows that school vandalism is down 62 percent; school suspensions are down 22 percent; citywide juvenile arrests are down 37 percent; and hard-core gang members are being removed from the community as they are identified.

The progress report was recently presented to the City Council by Police Chief James Anthony, who called it a "most worthwhile arm of law enforcement agencies."

It indicated that 50 families a month received some type of counseling during the past year, far exceeding the original goal of 20 a month. This is said to be a major factor in the reduction of youth problems.

We are not running the normal juvenile diversion program with the threat of jail hanging constantly over the juvenile offender," Jerry Van Leeuwen, director of Chino Youth Services, explained. "We are using a soft approach through which the kids discover that there are alternatives.

To underscore the acceptance of the program, Chino Youth Services may be able to increase its current $200,-000 budget for next year through grants by nearly 50 percent at a time when local, state and federal funding is hard to get and grants are at a very high premium.

The project is financially supported by the state Legislature which pays a bonus for keeping youths out of prison, the Department of Mental Health which will raise its contributions from $60,000 to $80,000 next year, the Arrowhead Justice Association which has supported the program since its inception nine years ago with federal appropriations, the City of Chino and the Chino Unified School District

Van Leeuwen said he will be in Sacramento Monday to seek another $70,000 to expand the juvenile diversion and elementary youth counseling programs for next year. What particularly pleases the director is the acceptance of the Chino Youth Services as a setting where families and individuals are able to work out their prob-

He said nearly half the youths last year were referred either by their parents or themselves, indicating that they believed the service could help them. Referrals also come from the schools, 38 percent, and law enforcement agencies. 15 percent.

Much of the effectiveness is attributed to an ever improving relationship between the schools and police, but Van Leeuwen said there has been a change in philosophy and attitude of the agency that permits children in trouble to present and examine their problems without the fear of being suspended from classes or going to jail.

We have found that suspension is rarely the most effective way," he explained. "It's better to get to the core of the problem. We try to reason with children in trouble. hoping to get to the emotional level of what's really behind their negative behavior.

He said he and his counselors found that a major problem appears to be a feeling of abandonment, of being ignored. When the child can't get attention at home, he looks for other places. Sometimes, he finds the price pretty high, but to him anything may be better than no atten-

Van Leeuwen said with both parents working, the figurative abandonment of the children is quite common. When parents come home from work, perhaps after fighting the traffic, their top priority is not always to listen to their children. Thus, if the child is having a problem at school or on the street, it is ignored, and he has no one to talk to about it. Somehow the frustration must come out

'We try to get in at the beginning." Van Leeuwen explained. "We talk to the parents, we talk to the children. We don't give them answers or alternatives. We try to get them involved in the process. When they have a part in the solution they are more likely to stick with it.

The clientele at Chino Youth Services spans the schoolage population, ranging from 5 to 18 years of age, but it is those 12 and over who get the most out of counseling sessions because that is the age where children really begin to reason. Van Leeuwen said nearly half of the clients

The basic problems that apply to girls are the communication gap with parents and passive defiance of authority. Girls are rarely violent. The violence comes out in boys who need an outlet to get rid of frustration and disappointment, according to the director.

Chino Youth Services has been evolving since 1972 when it was started by then Chino Police Chief Frank Meeham and school psychologist Vince Zivelonghi.

sition 13 which cut its funding in 1978 from about $100,000 to $43,000. But it was revived two years later with the passage of Assembly Bill 90 which supports community paid programs to combat juvenile delinquency and encour-ent ages keeping children out of jail.

Today the agency has six full-time and two part-time yeq counselors in addition to Van Leeuwen, plus seven volunteers from nearby colleges and schools. The counselors function under the direction of a certified marriage family and child counselor. Staff members are all college graduates with backgrounds in psychology. Last year they handled 415 children.

New bankruptcy law disastrous, creditors claim

Copley News Service

A surgeon, with a first-year income out of his residency of $138,000 relocated in a new city where his new employers guaranteed him a minimum income of $10,000

During the short interval between jobs, he filed for straight bankruptcy, eliminating $45,000 in debts.

This is one of a number of recent "horror story" case histories recounted by the National Consumer Finance Association as an example of what it considers disastrous effects of the federal Bankruptcy Reform Act, which became effective Oct. 1, 1979, and which, the association charges, has resulted in an 82 percent rise nationally in filings of personal bankruptcies.

NCFA is a trade organization composed of 715 consumer credit, financing, thrift and counseling

"The new act went far beyond what Congress intended," says Edward Forsberg, chairman of NCFA and president of an Atlanta finance company. "It needs corrective legislation. Under the new legislation, there was an increase in the amount of assets those filing for bankruptcy can keep.

Robert Evans, senior vice president of NCFA, says that in certain cases, couples in California can keep up to $100,000 in assets. Louis Karp, former San Diego bankruptcy judge and now a bankruptcy attorney, believes this figure is high, but agrees a couple could keep at least $70,000 in assets by planning a bankruptcy carefully, and by choosing the federal bankruptcy provisions.

These federal law provisions allow such exemptions for couples as $15,000 in residence equity, $1,200 for a car, as much as $3,000 for furniture, money from income tax refunds, life insurance, disability payments, as well as various personal property, such as jewelry.

Aslo under the new federal law, items that can be retained may even include those put up as collateral for secured loans. In addition, under both Chapter 7 (straight bankruptcy, in which all debts are wiped out) and Chapter 13 (under which the filer will pay back a percentage of debts), a filer can keep possession of a car or furniture on which money is still owed, by paying the lien holder the item's fair market value at the time of filing, rather than the amount still due.

It is features such as these, says Forsberg, that have encouraged filing by people who do have the ability to apy off their debts.

Not everyone agrees that the new law is the prime reason for a rise in bankruptcies. Karp believes that the economic situation is a major factor, along with unemployment, more divorced families, and consumer overuse of easy credit made available by finance com-

"I have seen one or two examples of abusers (of the new law)," Karp said. "I saw one who could easily have used Chapter 13, the wage-earner plan (under which he would pay back some of the debts), but there was nothing to stop him from taking straight bankruptcy.

'But out of 4,000 to 5,000 cases a year, we only have one or two abusers," Karp estimated.

However, Karp added that the new law has some blatant loopholes

"They (lending institutions) did a very poor job of selling their ideas to Congress at the time the law was

Now, NCFA, in concert with banks, credit unions and retailers, is attempting to rectify this by pushing for legislation to change the law.

A group calling itself "The Bankruptcy Discussion Group," composed of representatives of these various groups, is meeting regularly in Washington and working on legislation to present to Congress, according to

"We (NFCA) were pretty much alone in fighting the legislation at the time it was passed," Evans said. "Losing money through (personal) bankruptcy wasn't as big a concern to other groups at that time. Then the banks were more concerned about commercial bankruptcies.

"Now credit unions, for example, are having a terrible time across the board. Some are finding it difficult to pay dividends and some may even be having solvency

Lending groups have come up with a list of about 20 proposed changes in the code.

'The most important point," Forsberg says, "is that there be a provable financial need before an individual can enter bankruptcy proceedings. There should be some kind of asset liability test to determine whether the debtor can pay all or part of his debts.'

He also believes there should be a way courts would take future income into consideration.

"Take the recent case of an entertainer, who earns $6,-000 a year, and will be earning that in the forseeable

"He had lots of unsecured debts, which were completely wiped out, even though he had a future income to pay them off. We feel there are many times the courts should have the filer take Chapter 13 instead of Chapter

Test yourself quiz about tooth decay

Separating fact from fiction has never been easy where tooth decay is concerned, according to the California Dental Association (CDA).

"And that's not surprising when we consider that even today all the facts aren't in," says Dr. Francis S. Johnson, president of CDA. "Research into the cases and prevention of tooth decay quietly continues while public interest is focused on other more life threatening diseases such as cancer, for example.

'although people don't die from dental cavities, the disease causes extreme pain and some expense. And if teeth must be extracted, this can impair not only appearance but over-all well being, too," he adds.

Dr. Johnson suggests testing your awareness of the known facts about tooth decay with the following true/false quiz:

1. Tooth decay ranks third on the list of most prevalent diseases in the United States today.

False: Tooth decay is second only to the common cold as the most prevalent American disease.

2. White sugar promotes tooth decay but natural sugars found in fruits, do not. False: Daily selections from all four food groups milk, meat, vegetables and fruits, breads and cereals are important for optimal general health as well as dental health. However, some fruits, such as apples.

increase unwanted sugar in the mouth and promote

3. As teeth grow older they become more resistant to

True: It is believed older teeth decay less, partly because of an increased amount of fluoride present in the enamel, according to a recent CDA Journal article. In addition, older teeth are often more protected by fillings than are newer, younger teeth.

4. Saliva helps prevent tooth decay.

True: Saliva constantly bathes the teeth, helping wash away bits of food, acid and bacteria. In addition, certain properties in saliva help neutralize decay-causing acids. 5. Fluoride is a man-made additive of little proven value against tooth decay.

Who's ripping off whom in the market?

By JIMMY THORNTON Copley News Service

There she sat looking more like a fashion designer than a farmer's and consumers can get wife with 30 years of rain, dust, frost and bug wars behind her.

But she isn't a simple farmer's wife, out of "Little House on the Prairie." She and her husband are partners in a business big-time farming, the management of more than 800 acres in California's and, because of shortages Ventura County where they grow tons of citrus and avocados.

Before her, on a table, were the contents of a supermarket shopping bag: One gallon of milk ($1.98) two avocados (29 cents each), two oranges (nearly 30 cents each), a loaf of French bread (99 cents a loaf), a package of hamburger ($1.89 a pound) and some Wisconsin cheddar cheese ($2.79 a pound). The cost of the medium bag of groceries was $10.37.

'You say the farmer isn't ripping us off," a reporter said. "Then who is?"

Undaunted, she studied each item with her bright. blue eyes, pulled a hand calculator from her-purse and did some figuring (on her farm, her accountants would have to cull computer readouts)

And so it was that Carolyn Leavens, corporate-style farmer and president of California Women for Agriculture, was confronted with an expensive bit of everyday shopping.

These are big oranges, she said with the appreciation of a citrus grower. After consulting her calculator, she determined the grower got a nickel for each bright fruit. Too, she would have got 6 cents each for the avocados. She squeezed the loaf of bread and guessed it contained only a few cents worth of wheat.

An orange costs 30 cents and the farmer gets only a nickel? An avocado sets you back 29 cents and the farmer gets 6 cents?

Also, food prices have been escalating in recent months, but, according to Leavens, many farmers are getting the same rate of profit they got 20 years ago. Then who's ripping off

The way Leavens explains it, no one is. Par-

In fact, she said, consumers are in the bargain basement of producebuying today. She said there is a farm surplus

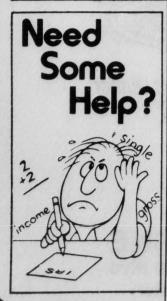

Prices are low when compared to what Germans and Russians pay (the former spend about a fourth of their available income on food, while consumers in the USSR spend more than half of their rubies to eat. Most Americans, in contrast, spend from 15 to 18 percent).

As for what happens to food prices after produce is trucked from the fields, she said transportation, processing and handling cause costs to soar.

'In the United States there is a complex distribution system," she said. 'There are an awful lot of hands making all the necessary connections to move food from coast to coast.

And each hand invloved has a palm up at the end of a transaction. (Too, both gasoline and diesel prices have soared in the past few months, adding to the transport costs, which are passed on to consumers.)

Leavens shares a popular belief among farmers that they aren't fully appreciated by the society they feed. She said a handful of farmers (2.8 percent of the population) is feeding Americans. Besides himself, each farmer is putting food on the table of 65 other people.

Farmers, she said, have prices for scarce items. become so efficient that today there is a surplus of food in the United States what they want at a price they can afford, even though they may complain about the rising costs.

But the future, she said will be food shortages. Costs will escalate. You won't be able to buy what you want when you want it you will pay premium concern:

Reading the palm of the nation and coming up with so much gloom in regard to food distribution is disconcerting to consumers, she acknowledged. But, she said, few consumers are aware of the forces at work now that are with alarm, is scary. There condemning future generations to hardship.

"In five years we will see those shortages and escalating prices," she said. She cited three areas of

Study may tell what climate was like for early man

By BOB CORBETT

Copley News Service The Deep Sea Drilling Project may play a key role in a major program designed to determine the climatic cocoon that ushered in the dawn of mankind some 3.6 million years ago.

The basic idea of the new program is to transfer the technology developed by the DSDP over the past decade to the lakes of East Africa around which, evidence suggests, modern man first developed.

The sediments at the bottom of some of these lakes have probably been deposited and remained undisturbed for perhaps 10 million years, according to Dr. James Natland, a staff scientist for the DSDP at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, Calif.

Because of the nature of the lakes, he said in an interview, it's possible that the climatic record may be preserved on a precise, year-by-year basis.

The time scale, he said, would more than cover the beginnings of man, and provide a backdrop for his development against a changing environment.

The most recent finds, and the oldest, are the fossil remains of Lucy, a human like or hominoid creature, uncovered in Ethiopia by a team headed by Dr. Carl Johanson of the Cleveland museum of Natural History.

These bones of a small female creature have now been dated at some 3.7 million years old.

Lucy and other fossil discoveries by Johanson and the Leakey family have seemed to cluster around the lakes The climatic conditions surrounding these manlike creatures, however, have remained pretty much a mystery. The best records go back only 45,000 years, according to an article in the journal, Science. The idea of drilling into the sediments at the bottom of the lakes is the brainchild of Dr. Daniel Livingston, a biologist at Duke University.

Now, after several years of ferment, Livingstone's idea seems ready for fruition. Early this April, a team of Duke University scientists headed by Dr. Bruce Rosendahl began to take acoustic and seismic soundings in three East African lakes that seem to offer the best potential of yielding valuable information.

They are, Rosendahl said in another interview, Lake Malawi, Lake Tanganyika and Lake Turkana.

Two of the three - Tanganyika and Turkana - have been closely associated with the recent anthropologic finds of the Johanson and Leakey groups

The main hope of the survey is to identify the "best targets" for drilling operations, Rosendahl said. He is a graduate of Scripps Institute.

Depending upon the results of these surveys, the Science article indicated, the National Science Foundation is considering spending up to $10 million to bore into the bottom of one of these lakes. A French oil company, for other reasons, is reported ready to add to the funds. The fossil findings of Johanson, the Leakeys and others 8 have startled the world in the past few years and forced many scientists to recast their theories about the beginfT nings of man. Controversy still swirls around the mean of ing of the new discoveries

Unfortunately, both Natland and Rosendahl indicated, the history of these times on land has been obscrubed by geological events, erosion and the vagaries of streams In short, there is no definitive link between the land and

That's the importance of the lake drilling proposal. Atom: the bottom of these lakes, scientists hope to find a nice. 16.1 clean record of East Africa's climatological past, 317 against which they can judge the development of mansion and his interactions with the environment

The organization, which was incorporated in December 1980, launched a fund-raising drive this year to supplement the school district's general fund. The district's preliminary budget reflects $685,000 worth of program reductions for the 1981-82 year. And last month the school board adopted a resolution calling for the dismissal of 69 non-teaching staff members. a move that is expected to save the district $310,000.

John Moore, president of the fund-raising organization, told a receptive school board, "...we feel the enormous effort that has gone into this has been successful.

Jil Stark, a vice president of the group, presented the $10.500 check to Maralyn Tipping, who chaired the board meeting. "On behalf of the students," Mrs. Tipping said. I'd like to thank all of you.

The donation will be formally accepted by the board at an upcoming meeting. Moore said the group intends to carry on with its fund-

Good samaritan ... Mary Jewel Mayes leads hectic life

By JO TUBB

Copley News Service LOS ANGELES - "At 2:30 a.m. I got a call from Gardena Memorial Hospital that a young Cambodian woman had been admitted with an ulcer attack. I zipped to the hospital and stayed with her until 7:30, then came home and napped for an hour.

'Then a Vietnamese man called to tell me about some welfare problems. I made three phone calls and took care of that.

Then a Japanese neighbor came in wanting help addressing greeting cards. Then someone else called with income tax problems.

'After I helped them, I zipped back to the hospital to check out the young woman. Then I zipped to the grocery store so I could be home by 1 p.m.

"It's been a light morning, my

She knows her guest needs time to take it all in, just as she herself might have needed five years ago when her life was routine and simple and confined mostly to her husband and her ailing mother.

Today her life is chaotic and unpredictable and shared with more than 250 Asian refugees. It also is altogether to her liking.

For Mayes is a doer. And that is what her story is all about, though she says it isn't much of a story and though she insists she isn't the stuff of celebrity. To the hundreds whose lives she touches almost on a daily basis - she is indeed a celebrity and, more important, a friend

Gardena is her own personal embassy and a haven for the troubled and confused Asians she assists. In a rare respite between doctors' appointments and job interviews, none of them for herself, she is prodded into talking about this even rarer woman known simply as Mary Jewel.

Her conversation rings with "my friend," and her hands, used so often to communicate with those who didn't speak English, are seldom still. When she says "head," they dart up to her salt-and-pepper hair. When she says "I," she points to herself to illustrate.

She'd never have been up at 2:30 a.m. helping a suffering refugee, she says, if it hadn't been for an incident that happened in this very room five years ago.

She'd recently quit her job and was nursing her gravely ill mother when the two caught a newscast about Cambodians fleeing their country on the heels of the Communist takeover in April 1975.

'My mother, who was a cancer patient, turned to me and said, 'If you didn't have to take care of me, you could help them," " she recalls. 'And that was the beginning.

Her mother died a month later at the Mayes home, surrounded by family and friends.

'That was an answer to prayer,' Mary Jewel believes, "because it had seemed clear from a medical standpoint that she couldn't be cared for at home. And she was desperately afraid of dying among

When the parents left for work a few minutes later, the children stayed for the day. For the childless Mayeses, it was a sort of Sarah and Abraham story

'We'd had very little experience with children, and suddenly we were sitting with these three little ones, and they didn't even speak English," she says. "John broke the ice when he put on his Coca-Cola uniform." Again the endearing smile. 'All the world loves a Coke.

She also acknowledges church members who work closely with her, whose faces aren't as familiar to the refugees as hers.

"I'm more visible than the rest, but I certainly don't do anything alone," she says. "There is a lot of cooperation or nothing would get done. This isn't my project. It's a lot of people working together.

Uplanders Lou Steslicki, Scott Griffin, Phil Watkins and Mike Munoz go for broke in the hose pull.

Connie Good, Dee Wiersma and Rita Wilson wear gloves to protect their hands during the bucket brigade.

The Firemen's Muster is a combination allstar olympics, water fight and old-fashioned family picnic. More than that, it's a chance for firefighters and their families to ham it up and

Muster was the term used years ago to gather volunteer firemen in times of emergency. The more contemporary meaning of the word indicates a competitive demonstration of the skills needed at the turn of the century to fight fires

Staged as much for the enjoyment of the aparticipants as for the amusement of the espectators, state-sanctioned musters are conducted throughout the year. Firefighters afrom the city of Upland staged what they called a mini-muster recently, an unofficial competition in honor of the city's 75th anniversary.

Men's and women's teams compete separately in three different events — the hose pull, involving a team of six that drags a hand-drawn hose cart down the length of the field and directs a stream of water to knock down a marker; the bucket brigade, a spirited version of bucket-passing where teams must fill a 50-gallon tank; and the go-for-broke water ball tug-o— war where a ball strung on an overhead wire is pushed against the opponents' goal with a stream of water.

Some might say the Uplanders weren't good hosts at the local muster as they took three of the six first-place trophies, but in the end everybody ended up smiling — and soaked.

Gritting her teeth in determination, Ontario's Gerry Brown aims the hose.

Bed can join architecture

)6 bi orde

By BARBARA HARTUNG Copley News Service

Q. We have a new home and are attempting to furnish different atilitions as we go along.

What might you suggest for the master bedroom which is 14 by 16 de feet with only one window? We have two problems. One is that the room is quite dark and without any personality, and the other is that we don't have much to spend on nterior decorating. We have kingized box springs and mattress and wo night stands. We plan to fit our oset with built-in drawers to iminate the need for dressers. We rill be repainting and putting down ew carpeting. — T.V.

A. If you like a clean, ontemporary look, you can fashion your bed into an important and architectural part of the room. This can be done with a modified canopy by stretching a piece of fabric against your bed wall up about seven feet, suspending the fabric out over he bed by using wood poles hung from the ceiling. This creates a loud of fabric over the bed, allowing you to introduce color and design, if you choose, through the fabric selection.

To lighten the room, you might paint your walls and select carpeting in a pale apricot shade. Create a comforter for the top of your bed also in pale apricot. For wrapping the box springs, choose a deeper, rich peach tone or even a light brown shade. For your fabric canopy, choose the light apricot for one side and the deeper tone for the other, stitching the two fabrics

Paint the wood poles one of the two colors. Bank the head of the bed against the wall with plump pillows in the pale and deeper shades.

This can provide a customized look in a room at moderate cost. Q. I'm moving into a small apartment and find that one of the two bedrooms is terribly small. I had wanted the room to be a guest room, but I feel it will be too crowded with a twin bed, chair, table, lamps and other necessary things. Are there any tricks I might use to create a cozy but comfortable guest room that would still be usable by me when I don't have a guest?

A. Maybe a small sleeper sofa would partially solve your problem. I have seen love-seat size pieces in sleeper designs today. Instead of end tables, perhaps building in narrow shelves around the sofa would be better, visually and functionally. Perhaps this would give you the space you might need for a very small desk and desk chair, allowing you to use the room when you are alone.

To stretch the space visually, use light colors in the room and avoid too many prints which are distracting in themselves. Or if you want a print on the sofa, perhaps you could repeat the print on the walls and at the windows in draperies or tailored Roman blinds.

Q. We have a cathedral-type ceiling in our living room. The previous owners painted the ceiling a dark tone to make the ceiling seem lower. The only thing that did was make the room seem dark and dreary

What would be a remedy to this situation? We have been thinking about the possiblility of installing cove lighting. — M.B.

A. Cove lighting would be a good solution if it were installed about a foot below the point where your ceiling begins to extend upward. If there is no delineation, then install it about seven or eight feet from the floor. This, of course, will give you light directed upward and then reflected from the ceiling into the room. To provide reflection you will need a light ceiling, white or offwhite. Remember that cove lighting can be rather flat and lacking in character, so you will probably want to supplement it with other lamps and fixtures to supply highlights and shadows. Also provide for spreading and sewing with good direct light.

Q. I just love the idea of a mirrored wall. I'm wondering whether to create one in my living room or dining room. Either room could handle it, I believe. How should I choose which room? - R.B.

A. I believe you would be better off putting the mirrored wall in your dining room, the room you would be using less and for shorter periods. However, do be careful about vast amounts of mirror.

The feeling of a canopy is created by stitching together two pieces of contrasting fabric (here pale apricot and brown) and extending fabric up the bed wall and out over the bed, suspended by wooden poles, capped with finials. The matress is wrapped in pale apricot, the box springs in brown for a contemporary bedroom. Colors are repeated in plump pillows.

The district is eligible for matching funds, up to 1 percent of its total budget for district maintenance needs that fall within the state board's guidelines. Tanner said items such as the swimming pool, sprinklers and telephones were not eligible.

Buyers continue to defy economists, fuel growth

Copley News Service

It's one thing for opera sopranos to die of gotten as high as 19," he consumption. But now the said. economists are dying of consumption, too.

As the American consumer, in defiance of the nation's money managers, continues to purchase goods and services, the economics profession is doing a collective Mimi shrieking and coughing, shrieking and coughing, shrieking and coughing

The economists believed that consumers would close up their purses as the Federal Reserve continued to let interest rates rise. But consumption rises apace. The government announced that real (inflation - adjusted) economic growth in the first quarter ran at an orgiastic 8.5 percent annual rate.

Personal consumption is by far the largest component of the gross national product (GNP). Largely because of the auto industry's new-car rebates, consumption zoomed early in the first quarter, then seemed to wane a little. Although some recent evidence indicates consumption is softening, a number of economists are beginning to wonder if it will continue right through

After all, inflation is definitely receding, thanks mainly to food and fuel cost sags. Consumer polls reveal a new optimism - partly because of belief in President Reagan's program, partly because of the lower inflation, partly because of an expected tax rate cut.

But Beryl Sprinkel, the highest monetary affairs expert in the Reagan administration, said that interest rates will remain high for the rest of this year and into next year. In interviews, economists said they expect the high rates to dampen consumption, but some are predicting fairly sturdy growth the rest of this year.

Some economists are at last recognizing that the underground economy the sub rosa economic activity that escapes the tax collectors - may be fueling consumption. Some feel that the subterranean economy is huge - perhaps one - fifth to one - fourth the size of the total measured economy GNP, or more than half a trillion dollars. If it's anywhere near that big, it may be a clue to the consumption conundrum.

Irwin L. Kellner, chief economist for New York's Manufacturers Hanover, said, "The outlook isn't as gloomy as some think it is - the people are better off than economists have been led to believe. The underground economy, whether it's 1 percent of GNP or one-third of GNP, is a big pool of buying power.

The most widely accepted estimate is that the off - the - book economy is $265 billion, if only two - thirds of that got into the spending stream, it would lift the current rate of consumption by 10 percent."

Kellner also pointed to the huge equity that people have in their homes, they can borrow on it - or just feel better because of it. The total value of homes in the United States is $2 trillion: "If you subtract the $1 trillion in mortgage debt outstanding, that leaves $1 trillion in unmortgaged value of housing that could be tapped," he said. That $1 trillion is the equivalent of 55 percent of total after - tax income of $1.8 trillion, Kellner said.

After the second - quarter collapse last year, consumers held down their outstanding revolving installment debt. That gives room for expansion. "It Upland News 6161
